Ignoring Evil Enables Evil

Thanks to God's grace through Harvey Weinstein, we've gotten a reminder:

You can pretend that up is down and wrong is right for a while – maybe even a very long while – but eventually the gig is up. Eventually reality crushes any fantasy built on an unbiblical foundation.

That's just how things work in God's creation.

Always has been.

Always will be.

Even so, we're a people prone to pretending and propping up all manner of anti-Christ constructs, hoping that tightening our blinders every now and then will be enough to get us by. We like (and are encouraged) to believe that if we just pretend hard enough and long enough, we can and will outlast any reality-based threat that might come along.

This is why now we have, for example, things like public schools and Social Security – both overtly Marxist/anti-Christian constructs – as cherished institutions by most self-identified “conservative Christians” in the “land of the free” and the home of the NSA.

When even the Republican Governor of a supposedly conservative state like Tennessee can openly state \(and consistently govern as though\) “The only reason government exists is to buy things for people that they can’t buy themselves.”, we get an unvarnished and unhidden look at just how thoroughly Marxist we’ve become...and that’s on the Pagan Political Right. (Which only goes to prove yet again another uncomfortable reality that American “conservatives” love to ignore in political practice: The Pagan Political Right Wing and Left Wing are two wings of the same dragon.)

But as God through Weinstein has shown us, this long running self delusion can and will ultimately flame out, likely in dramatic fashion.

One day it will end.

The bubble (or bubbles) will pop.

Reality will win out, as it always does in God’s creation.

And when it does, we will be forced to acknowledge that the satanic economic construct that we used to fuel the many satanic programs, systems, and wars that we’ve come to adore in America was always a vile and disgusting thing – it was always a tool of bondage and death.

The “it” in question here is our fiat economic system – the system by which we pretend that it’s somehow legitimate to give a handful of people the power to create magic “money” out of thin air while the rest of us literally spend our lives chasing after whatever scraps of this “money” are made available to us by way of the “too big to fail”, fiat-fueled systems and institutions lording over us. (For more on the basics of this system, please read Fiat Slavery: We have been bought and paid for...with nothing.)

This is all noteworthy as we are now lurching toward the next in a long series of economic catastrophes made possible through our fiat economic system, and it is particularly of note in light of acknowledgements to that effect being made by some of the elites at or near the top of the economic tower of Babel now teetering on the brink.

As ZeroHedge reported today in Deutsche Asks A Stunning Question: “Is This The Beginning Of The End Of Fiat Money?”:

But let’s be honest, if we’ve thought about the foundations of our economic system for even the teeniest, tiniest little bit, we already know that the globe-dominating, fake-empire fueling fiction that is the US Dollar is the ultimate Naked Emperor...which is why we don’t tend to think about this stuff at all and why the State-licensed “professionals” in our State-run “education” systems don’t teach us anything about said nakedness of said Emperor.

However much the powers that be may wish for us to believe otherwise, pretending that all is well and that our system will somehow, some way magically find a way to go on forever won’t save us.

It'll only make the coming crash that much harder.

Even the Emperor's own people are beginning to admit long avoided truths out loud. Yet, even as they do, most of us go on pretending and enabling a system literally designed to enslave us, our children, and all future generations to come.

That makes Harvey Weinstein and his enablers look kinda weak by comparison, doesn't it?
